TEACHERS TRAINING: SOME DATA

Inclusion and SEL: Teacher's Training and testing at school

230 European teachers have enrolled in the online course and 120 of these have completed the training in full.

The background of the participating teachers is very different but in general we can say that most have between 5 and 20 years of teaching experience, they teach in primary and secondary schools mainly. The subjects taught are mostly literary in some cases more scientific as in Cyprus.

In general for many of them it was the first time they attended a course on emotional competence

Analysis of Teachers' Questionnaires: Before and After Training –

For what concern the answers of teachers we got 135 questionnaire filled in before training and 77 questionnaires filled in after training. This happens because some teachers did not finish the course and others forgot to fill in the final questionnaires. While some areas saw limited changes, such as applying the same teaching method for all students, there were ~~showed improvements in the attitudes of Teachers'~~ starting points when designing tasks and a greater acceptance of differentiated instruction, using diverse materials to cater to individual needs. The training also heightened teachers' awareness of the challenges faced by students with diverse backgrounds and specific learning needs, fostering a commitment to providing targeted support. Collaborative approaches, peer involvement, and the importance of inclusivity were further recognised and embraced. The overall positive response to the training underscores its effectiveness in promoting a more inclusive and student-centred approach to education.

DATA ANALYSIS TEACHER SATISFACTION QUESTIONNAIRES

The satisfaction questionnaire was filled in by 69 participants, the analysis was developed taking account all countries together.

In general, 80 per cent of the participants significantly enjoyed the course.

All participants (except 1) confirmed they would apply/test the curriculum and pedagogical resources in their classroom.
